Sustainable Procurement Strategies and Managing Supply Chain Risks

October 10 & 11, 2019

Two full days of instruction!

Speaker: Darin Matthews, FNIGP, CPPO, CPSM

A key challenge for today's supply chain management professional is how to get more value from our supply chain resources. We must begin to look at strategies such as sustainability and managing, avoiding or mitigating risk wherever and whenever we can. This two-day session will cover the following aspects of supply chain strategies:

Sustainable Supply Chain Strategies This topic will highlight what leading organizations are doing in the area of sustainable procurement. Since every purchase we make has the ability to impact human health and the environment, why not make product choices that minimize or eliminate these impacts? Sustainable procurement is much more than buying copy paper with recycled content (although that's a great start); it includes measuring supplier performance, adopting policies on sustainable purchasing standards, and ensuring equity in our procurement practices. Real life case studies will be shared on best practices from leading agencies.

Managing Risks in the Supply Chain The supply chains that we operate in are full of risk, including financial, operational, environmental and political risks. How do we go about managing (and mitigating) these risks as supply chain professionals? This session will talk about the various approaches to risk management, as there is no "one size fits all" when it comes to risk. Do we avoid it, mitigate it, transfer it, or just keep our fingers crossed? The presenter will offer his experience and insights from both a procurement management perspective and a through a risk management lens. Case studies will be shared with attendees that will help to better understand the importance of properly managing supply chain risks.
